yet We have ſeen with Pleaſure that All Sorts, and Parties, (if I muſt uſe that Word,) of Men amongſt Us, have, (to their Honour be it ſpoken) in their ſeveral turns, and as conſtantly as any Opportunity offer'd it ſelf, openly and zealouſly made oppoſition to Any Attempts, which They either knew, or imagin'd, to affect the known Laws and Liberties of their Country. Nay, it muſt be acknowledg'd, that None have ſhewn more of this Spirit in Parliament, than Thoſe who have ſeem'd fearful of giving too great Encouragement to Liberty, for fear of the ill Conſequences of it: And it ought ever to be accounted one Part of their great Glory, that, out of Parliament, in the greateſt and happieſt Struggle for Public Liberty, that the preſent Generation, or perhaps any other, ever was witneſs
